

Like any dreamer, I moved to San Francisco after selling my earthly possessions in Dallas. Anything that didn't fit in my car became a Craigslist trophy for future generations (like the kid who received my entire comic book collection for $20—I hope he realizes how lucky he is!).

Like any realist, I found myself a career as a software engineer at a tech startup (this, after working as an instructor at a science museum). I consider myself fortunate to have found something I enjoy doing and I'm looking to find a balance so I can devote some more time for activities like archery, rock climbing, bowling, basketball, and hiking. I'm curious by nature and adventurous at heart, which is why I'm looking forward to taking up fencing later this summer.

I have traveled internationally for programming competitions, which may sound a bit nerdy but it allows me to experience new places and meet new people. Living in such a beautiful part of the country makes me antsy for some weekend trips this summer.

Some favorites: sushi, travel, water sports, music with a feel-good message, shows on AMC and HBO, board games (I don't mean to get competitive, but I will destroy you in Settlers in Catan), randomly ticking things off of my proverbial bucket list, playing pool, getting together with you for a cup of coffee... is that too forward? 😊

You:

Are an intellectual woman who can challenge me and make me think outside of convention and my norm. I love spirited debates over spirits! You are a passionate person, know your way around a museum or are at least interested in exploring a new one together and don't mind taking in the occasional show or concert. You are game for an adventure in Napa Valley for a hot air balloon ride. You are a GOOD person; trustworthy, honest, and know how to make a fella laugh.

I look forward to hearing from you!
